UN Colleagues from Uganda, Member States and the representative of the UNHCR Regional Director

Ladies and Gentlemen,

All protocol observed

First of all, congratulations to the experts who have been deliberating here for the past two days.

I am delighted to welcome you to the Pearl of Africa. Uganda is a peace and development innovation hub. It's a nation with a clear roadmap informing its development aspirations outlined in National Vision 2040 and a nation that has demonstrated its willingness to ensure that it leaves no one behind as it leverages its natural resources to achieve sustainable development and sustain peace. It is also the home of the SDGs.

African States have a long tradition of hospitality towards refugees and have a long history of developing legal frameworks governing aspects of refugee protection dating back to 1969. Uganda's rich cultural heritage grounds her approaches to development including refugees hosting which is ensconced in empathy, solidarity and brotherhood. Drawing on its linguistic origins from the Southern African Nguni word "Ubuntu", the concept denotes humanity towards others. Across the different cultures in Uganda, it manifests as a set of values centred on respect, dignity and solidarity that can be found across the Great Lakes Region.

Your Excellency, Ladies and Gentlemen

Today we sit in the same space where Africa adopted nearly one decade ago, the Kampala Convention on Internally Displaced Persons and Refugees, which remains the only convention of its kind by regional groupings in the world. The Uganda Solidarity Summit on Refugees, which was held here, was the first summit of its kind to be held in the global south in the same country for which support was mobilised. The summit helped to raise the profile of the refugee situation in Uganda from a forgotten situation to a globally recognized best practice informed by a robust national narrative, which enabled successful roll out of the Comprehensive Refugee Response Framework (CRRF).

Uganda has a long history of providing a safe haven in an unstable region, while dealing with its own development challenges and increasing vulnerabilities. The generosity and investments of the Ugandan Government and people in maintaining an open-door, transformative policy, is unique and commendable, particularly at a time when the asylum space is shrinking in many countries around the world. Thank you Uganda! Uganda's National Development Plan includes a Settlement Transformative Agenda that informs the comprehensive approach to refugee management in the country. At present 12 districts in vulnerable regions are demonstrating the courage and strain that comes from hosting those fleeing violence. These districts have great investment potential and deserve our support.

Before I conclude, I would like to commend the Government of Uganda for being the first country in the world to formulate integrated sector refugee response plans for refugees and host communities for the education and health sectors. We need to urgently mobilize financing to increase investments in social services and wealth creation for host communities and refugees informed by these plans. We look forward to upcoming plans in livelihoods, water and the environment.

On behalf of the United Nations in Uganda, I would like to express our gratitude to the leaders of the 12 refugee hosting districts. At a time of challenges including drought and climate related effects resulting in food insecurity, we cannot underestimate the importance of the hospitality of the people and bold steps taken by the leaders of the 12 districts under the leadership of the Office of the Prime Minister and with support from the United Nations and other partners to respond to the impacts of the refugees' influx. I reiterate our commitment to continue to advocate for support and investment in Uganda.

Your Excellency,

Allow me to conclude with a special vote of thanks to the UN Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for the Great Lakes region H.E. Said Djinnit for his leadership and service. This is his last event in his current capacity and I wish to convey the thanks on behalf of the UN family for his efforts and wish him all the best in his new endeavours. Uganda is the current president of the Regional Oversight Mechanism so it is appropriate that the Special Envoy bid us farewell from here. I ask you to please stand up for recognition.

Thank you for your attention.

Merci beaucoup
